Look out the windows at Country Hills Library. Turn back the clock and use your imagination. What do you see? Local artist Jefferson Campbell-Cooper imagined the landscape as it could have been through the region's geologic history from the pre-Cambrian era to the Laurentide Glaciation period. These periods helped to shape our regional environment. Campbell-Cooper painted images of six geologic periods on large wood panels. These panels, called "In Time", are now installed beneath the library's clerestory windows above the main aisle.

Accessible to the public during library hours.
